Peer Review of the “Culture Globalisation Research Report: Straight Lines through Volcanoes to Sun Shrines” by Mika Virpiranta , B.A. & M.Sc, ISBN: 978-989-20-6222-8, Portugal, 167 pages

Author Mika Virpiranta comes with unique research paper on potential connection between volcano lines and ancient shrines.

What was the main reason for ancients to choose location for their temples? Was it one super-civilization who built first major temples all over the Planet or number of smaller societies? Is there a connection between number of temples along the straight lines? What was the purpose of original shrines, and who took over their places?

These are the major questions when it comes to the developed ancient civilizations.

No wonder that Mika Virpiranta has to address this issue in “Declaration”, “Forewords” and “Previous Research” concluding that “established academia...denies scientific integrity and validity” to independent researchers because they threaten their “ruling paradigm”.

As long as scientific methodology is applied in research, one has nothing to worry about. Science is there to uncover scientific truths, not to protect establishment.

Accepted paradigm is that ancient man was primitive not capable of building larger construction complexes until 7.000 years ago. However, discovery of Gobekli Tope complex in Eastern Turkey (11.600 years old), Yonaguni monuments on the bottom of Pacific floor (more than 12.000 years old), Gunung Padang Pyramid in Indonesia (23.000 years old). Bosnian Pyramid complex in Visoko (34.000 years old), new dating of temple complexes in Peru, Bolivia, Mexico, Egypt, Russia and other areas has completely changed the view of ancient civilizations.

It seems that Mika Virpiranta traces back some of the superior civilizations of the past.

He has developed entirely new approach in science establishing connection between volcano lines and shrines. In simplified terms, he uses straight lines between two volcanos pointing to the shrine. He talks about the “Holly line” where at least three shrines form mutual shrine-to-shrine line.

Research methods applied are explained in “Abstract” and “Methods”.

He discovered 30 “impact craters” (several straight rows of volcanos pointing to the mutual shrine) and 70 holly lines, analyzing over 2000 volcano lines. It makes this research first comprehensive analysis of connection between volcanos and location of ancient shrines.

Several questions arise: Why would ancients locate their temples at the volcano lines? How did they know about them?

Obviously, answers would affect established paradigm on ancient history. First, ancient civilization(s) were more advanced than we think. Second, there is direct connection between energy of the volcanos (lava, minerals, metals) and purpose of shrines. Next, ancient knew our Planet much better than previously thought.

Mika Virpiranta goes one step further claiming that all original shrines were dedicated to the Sun, and those who came later changed the purpose because they were “Thunder headed cult”. Recent history (Spanish conquistadors and civilizations in Meso- and South America, for example) gives him right for such claims about “Gods” and “Anti-Gods” worships.

Dozens of connections between volcano lines and shrines were described in his Report. Since some of these 75 locations are recent discoveries and/or not firmly established origins, his explanations are intriguing. It would take much more research to prove every single location to be part of the Sun or Thunder cults, but they do fulfill criteria to be on the volcano lines plus ruins are present. Same goes for the number of his claims in section “Volcanism and Expanding Earth”.

This research add to newly done measurements by Russian and Bosnian pyramid researchers: oldest and most superior pyramids were always built above energy potent places (underground water flows, iron ore, electromagnetism, ley lines, etc.) Hartman and Curry grids were always taken into consideration. However, volcano lines, who, according to this Report, are always present, give significant and unique weight to the location choice.

It has always been about the energy fields, frequencies and vibrations. Ancients simply knew that stone/megalithic objects, of certain shapes and orientation, amplify natural energy sources.

Work of Mika Virpiranta present pioneering effort to establish connection between spiritually developed intelligent beings on this Planet and usage of the most powerful and violent natural source of energy: volcanic energy.

Effects of his work will flood many more aspects of our life: history, anthropology, geology, archaeology, geography, politics, religion.

Wish him luck in his future research.
